THE PRINCIPLE OF EXPEDIENCY IN THE NETHERLANDS

Basics: National

- In the Netherlands the hierarchical relationship government/police is two folded:
- In criminal matters, the police is subordinated to the Crown Prosecutorial Service directed by the Higher Prosecutorial Office in The Hague.
- In matters of public security and national order, the police is subordinated to the Ministry for the Interior.

THE PRINCIPLE OF EXPEDIENCY IN THE NETHERLANDS

Basics National 2

- In both cases there is, eventually, a political responsibility to be carried towards the Houses of Parliament by the politically responsible Ministers:
- the Minister of Justice is, ultimately, responsible for the way the Higher Prosecutorial Office conducts the national policy in criminal matters. He has to answer the questions putted forward in the Parliament; if the answers do not satisfy, he can be dismissed.
- The same goes for the Minister of the Interior: She has to stand interrogation by the Houses for the way she instructed by guidelines the Police.

Basics Local

- In criminal matters, the police is subordinated to the Local Prosecutorial Service. The Prosecutor is accountable to the Higher Prosecutorial Office.
- In matters of public order, the police is subordinated to the Mayor. The Mayor is accountable to the local Council.
- The Police is organised and financed within a national system by law.

THE PRINCIPLE OF EXPEDIENCY IN THE NETHERLANDS

Basics for prosecution

- Not every crime, coming to the cognizance of the Service, has to be pursued.

The Service,
directed by the Office, has the “rule of expediency”
at its disposal.

THE PRINCIPLE OF EXPEDIENCY IN THE NETHERLANDS

In the EU-framework, with a view to the respective prosecutorial national systems, there are two systems, at first sight antithetical to each other:

1. The rule of absolute legality: the Prosecutorial Service is submitted to the mandatory obligation to pursue each crime under its cognizance. There is no latitude of appreciation. This is the system of the Bundes Republik Deutschland.
2. The rule of relative expediency: it is up to the Prosecutorial Service, on a case-by-case bound basis, to decide as to whether positive prosecutorial action will be serving positive national interests of justice in the case.

- But certainly, the system of relative expediency activates as an inherent element of the balance of powers in matters of criminal policy the constant braking system by the primacy of politics.
- By virtue of the fact that the Prosecutorial Service knows that there is a constant risk that the Minister of Justice has to come to the Parliament to carry full responsibility, the Office will act according to the presumed wishes and desires of the Minister of Justice.
- The Office will not wait until the Minister is going to show his disapproval or the Parliament its official disavowal.

- In the Dutch view, this gives the system the highest level of democratic legitimation.

Therefore:

LETS PONDER UPON

THE RULE OF RELATIVE EXPEDIENCY
IN THE DUTCH LEGAL SYSTEM.

Evidential system

- Evidential system in the Netherlands: free.
- It is with the judge to decide whether he has reached a conviction that the accused committed the facts as laid down in the indictment.
- The judge can use the reports of experts in a non-judicial discipline (ballistic experts, psychiatrists, physicians etc).
- There is no legal obligation to do this.
- The decision that the accused is guilty has to be a reasoned one. The law prescribes the way of legal reasoning.

Expertise

- The Dutch Forensic Institute is one of the centers of expertise on which the judge can rely.
- The Institute is an agency subordinated to the Ministry of Justice.
- Its services stand at the disposal of the Prosecutorial Service.
- If the attorney for the defense wants to use the Institute's expertise, he has to ask the intervention of the Service. The Service is free to comply with the requests for the defense.
- Unwillingness to comply will be an issue to be discussed in Court. The judge can order the compliance.
